Planting Instructions

Dig a large hole, at least twice as wide as the pot. This will allow for easy establishment of new roots. It is recommended to perform a soil test to determine what amendments your soil needs. You can add compost to your soil without soil test results. Add a 1 inch layer, or 2 inches if your soil is very sandy or lacking organic matter. Thoroughly mix the compost with existing soil. To remove plant from pot, place one hand on top of soil. Turn pot upside down. Grasp bottom of pot and lift up, cleanly removing pot from soil.

After carefully removing the root ball from the plastic pot, set in at the proper depth so the soil will cover the bud union by 1-2", or so the soil remains at the same level as it did when potted.

Spread a 2-3" layer of mulch around the plant, tapering towards the base of the plant. Mulching suppresses weeds and retains even moisture. Water slowly and deeply once a week unless we have received 1 inch of rain. Cut off faded blooms to promote greater flower development.

In winter, after the ground has frozen, mulch up with a mound 8-12" high to protect from winter damage.

Pruning Guidelines

All roses should be pruned in early spring, after the first buds have begun to swell, to remove any dead, damaged or diseased branches. Weak and crossing stems may also be pruned at this time. Be careful about timing because a late frost may kill new growth. If you are unable to tell if a branch is alive simply scratch the surface. If the layers below are green it is living, if it is brown cut the stem back as far to the ground, or living branch, as you are able. You may also prune throughout the growing season as you deadhead or cut flowers for bouquets. When you deadhead the spent blooms the plants energy will be used to produce new buds. Always stop pruning 6 weeks before the first fall frost date to help the plant go dormant.

Pruning is done to provide good air circulation and create strong stems and good form. With old garden rose, shrub rose, ramblers, or climbers pruning time depends on whether or not flowers are produced on new or old growth. If it flowers at the tips of the stems it most likely produces on new canes. For those that produce on old growth wait until after flowering to prune, wait until climbers and ramblers are at least three years old to prune (unless removing damaged or diseased stems).

For roses which bloom on new growth prune in early spring. A heavy pruning removes all but 3-5 canes. These canes are then cut back to leave only three buds remaining. With a heavy pruning you will stimulate new growth and your rose bush will produce larger blossoms. A light pruning leaves 5-7 canes, 18"-24" tall. This will create more, but smaller, flowers. Generally for hybrid teas, grandifloras, polyanthas, and miniatures removing only one third to one half of the plant's growth is the best method.
